A LETTER FROM OXFORD, CONCERNING
Mr. SAMUEL JOHNSON's
Late BOOK.

Διὰ δυσφημίαν ἢ εὐφημίαν, ὡς πλάνοι ἢ ἀληθεῖς.

OXFORD,
Printed in the Year MDCXCIII.

*A Letter from Oxford concerning Mr.
SAMUEL JOHNSON's late Book.*

ACCORDING to your Desire I am very willing to give you not only my own Judgment upon Mr. Johnson's late Book, but that of others, who are much more able than I am my self to pass a Judgment of it: You know I live in a Place where Men of his Principles have been almost universally cry'd down as Enemies to the English Monarchy, and consequently to the Church of England, (though neither you nor I are very clear in that Consequence, if there were any Foundation of Truth in the Premises) and where every thing that bears his Name, or that of any other Person who is under the same Prejudice here, was like to find but cold Entertainment: and yet I can assure you, that this Book has made some Converts amongst us, such, I mean, who were not our Enemies out of pure Malice; has stagger'd others, who were less settled upon their Lees; and has hardned others in their Impenitency, whose Eyes the God of this World has blinded, that they cannot believe nor understand.

It is observed in the Acts of the Apostles, and inserted into Holy Writ by the immediate Inspiration of God's Holy Spirit, as a most notorious Instance of the Prevalency of the everlasting Gospel of Christ, that a great Company of the Priests

 Cap. 6. were obedient to the Faith: as if they, of all Vers. 7.

Men, were the most obdurate and hardest to be wrought upon.

For such is the Infirmary of Mankind, that we must have Men to instruct us in our Duty ; and the Veneration we naturally have for a Deity, carries us sometimes insensibly and unawares into an implicate blindfold Awe and Respect for the Persons of those Men who officiate at his Altar, preach his Word to us, and instruct us out of it in our Duty to him and our Neighbours.

But since God has put this Treasure in earthen Vessels, as St. Paul informs us (though perhaps that Expression, if it were not in Holy Scripture, might seem needless, for daily Experience taught us before he was born, and will do to the End of the World, that so it is) these Dispensers of his holy Word and Sacraments being Men of like Passions with us, have been apt to take Advantage of the Credulity of Mankind, and to inculcate things into us in the Name of the Lord, which the Lord hath not said; neither came they into his Heart.

And

And having once taught us, in the Name of the Lord; Doctrines, which really are, and which sometimes they themselves know to be but Traditions of Men, (for I cannot have that Charity for them all, as to believe that they believe themselves) they are then obliged for the maintaining of their Credit, and by a spiritual Pride, which is very incident to earthen Vessels, not to retract those Doctrines, which indeed they cannot do, without giving God or themselves the Lie, and without betraying the Interest to which they think those Doctrines subservient. And hence it comes to pass that Clergy-men of all others are hardest to be reclaimed from any Errors that they have once imbarqued in. Their Interest for the most part lies at stake; their Reputation, as Men of Learning and Judgment; and above all, as Men intrusted with the Oracles of God.

Accordingly we find by History both Sacred and Profane, that in all Nations, and in all Ages, the Clergy, whether Pagan, Jewish, Mahometan, Popish or Protestant, have muster'd all their Force from time to time, to oppose any Innovations whatsoever, either in Doctrine or Discipline, that have had the least Colour of being Alterations for the better.

The Jewish Clergy crucified our Saviour, and persecuted his Apostles and Disciples, where they had any part of the Civil Power in their own Hands; and where they had not, they stirred up the Pagan.

Ma-

Magistrates to do their Drudgery, in persecuting the Christians, as appears by the Acts of the Apostles.

The Pagan Clergy opposed Christianity, because if our Saviour's Doctrine of One only God were received, their multiplicity of Gods, and consequently their several Temples, Altars, Victims, Priesthoods, Profits, Perquisites, Advantages and Emoluments whatsoever, thereunto belonging, or in any wise appertaining, would become utterly void and of none effect, to all Intents and Purposes whatsoever.

How the Popish Clergy opposed the Reformation, and with what weak Arguments, but under how potent Inducements of another kind, we all know who have looked but a hundred and fifty, or two hundred Years backward into the History of this part of Christendom.

Examples of our Protestant Clergy I forbear to mention, because I would not be invidious; and because we live in an Age, in which Wounds ought rather to be indeavoured to be healed, than to be ripp'd into, and made wider.

But this hint is sufficient to inform us, how great Prejudices the Clergy, of what kind soever, labour under, with Respect to the maintaining what they have once espoused and taught; and consequently how great a Credit accrues to any Truth, by conquering their Prejudices, and gaining them them to a Reception and Entertainment of it.

Which that this Book of Mr. Johnson's has done in a great Measure in this University, I can and do assure you; and I will give you an Account by what Methods their Conviction proceeded, before I give you my own or any Bodies Censure of the Work it self.

They had their Education under the Reign of the late King Charles the Second, in whose times all the several Maxims and Principles of Tyranny were set on foot, and improved to the uttermost; the Government of this Nation represented as an absolute Monarchy; and that sort of Government indeavoured to be proved the only Government, that had any Foundation in Nature or Scripture. Hence proceeded the several Branches of Slavery, viz. that the Legislature was vested in the Person of the Prince only; and the two Houses of Parliament, that of the Commons especially, as inconsiderable, as they are represented in the Beginning of Mr. Johnson's Preface; the unalterable Right of Succession; the Irresistibility of Princes; and their darling new-coin'd Doctrine of Passive Obedience, the Characteristical Mark of the Church of England, to use the Words of a late Prelate, when he was about to give up the Ghost.

These Principles were then so far countenanced at Court, that the asserting of them in the Pulpit
and

and in the Press, was then the only way to Preference in the Church; and Interest striking in with Education, the poor Gentlemen were tied Hand and Foot. Their Education was such as had deprived them of Opportunities to be rightly informed; and their Interest going hand in hand with their Ignorance, they did not seek after Information.

That which contributed to their Blindness of Mind, was, that some Men, not merely Speculative and Notional, as Clergy-men generally are, the subject Matter of whose Studies and Enquiries is for the most part wrapp'd up in the Clouds, were set at work by the Court to perswade the Nation, that what the Clergy taught us, as the Law of God, was really and truly the Law of this Realm likewise.

Our Gentlemen here have not used to trouble their Heads much with humane Laws, which they are apt to look down upon with Contempt, and account of them as a Knack only by which one sort of Men amongst us pick Money out of other Mens Pockets: but they had heard at a Distance of Fundamental Laws, and were very ready to believe such Men as Brady, Johnson, Filmer, &c. who told them as from History, Records, and the utmost Antiquity, that our Government was the same by our Law, that it was or ought to be by their Divinity.

Thus

Thus they were lull'd asleep, till the Consequences of their Principles came to stare them in the Face in King James his time: Slavery they could digest, for that was what they had professedly own'd, preach'd and printed. But they were not aware that Slavery would bring in Popery, or whatever the Sovereign had a mind to, till they saw by Experience that a Slave is a Dog that must leap over a Stick, and back again, as his Master bids him.

Being thus at a stand, and having no Remedy left them but their Prayers and Tears, it pleased God to stir them up a Deliverer, whom indeed they accepted at first with open Arms, tho some of them thought afterward he delivered them more than he needed: however, neither the Providence of God, nor the Authority of the States of the Realm, nor the Vox Populi would be limited and restrained by the Dreams of our Men of Theory.

The Revolution being thorowly wrought, they were glad to find themselves in the Condition they were in; and as the Wit of Man is fruitful of Inventions, they cast about how to come in to the Interest of this present Government, without renouncing what they had formerly so openly avow'd to be the Law of God : and according to their several Judgments, Wits, Apprehensions, Fancies, Whimfies, Fooleries, &c. one submits to Providence, another to an Usurper, another to a King de facto, another to a Conqueror : one says, King James left us ; another, we turn'd him out ; another, Gallio-like, cares for none of these things, but submits to the Powers that are. Now this Book of Mr. Johnson's has so effectually, even in their own Judgments, and by their own Acknowledgments, beat them out of all these weak Strong-holds, that they begin to be satisfied, that what all the rest of Mankind believe, is true ; to wit, that there is no safe Rule for Conscience in Civil Affairs, but the several Laws of Nations : and this makes them see the necessity of enquiring into our Laws, if they will be Dogmatical in Matters of this nature, or else of submitting their Judgments to the States of the Realm Assembled in Parliament.

This great Work Mr. Johnson's Book has done with many here : it has convinced them that Law is Law ; and that heretofore they did not understand the difference betwixt Law and no-Law. And this Conviction having put some of them upon bending their Studies towards an Enquiry into the Laws of this Government, we may hope to see fulfill'd what

what was said by the Prophet; The Priest's Lips should keep Knowledge, and they should seek the Law at his Mouth, for he is the Messenger of the Lord of Hosts.

The two Positions which Mr. Johnson lays down in the beginning of his short Book, at the end of his Preface, viz.

“ That the People of England did actually Depose King James the Second for Misgovernment, and promoted the Prince of Orange in his stead: And,

“ That this Proceeding was according to the English Constitution, and prescribed by it; Have used to be traduced by our Clergy as Republican Principles; and as such are branded by a Reverend Prelate of our Church, in a Preface of his to three Treatises concerning the Jesuits Loyalty: Where, according to the Genius of the Court, as it then was, he expresseth himself thus; viz. “ It is allowed by all Friends to our King and his Government, that the Commonwealth Principles are destructive to it; and that none who own them, can give any sufficient Security for their Allegiance. “ All the mischievous Consequences of the Republican Principles, do follow upon the Pope's owning the Power of deposing Princes. “ However, the Primitive Chri“ stians thought it no Flattery to Princes, to de“ rive their Power immediately from God, and “ to make them accountable to him alone, as be“ ing superiour to all below him ; yet after the “ Pope’s Deposing Power came into Request, the “ Commonwealth-Principles did so too, and the “ Power of Princes was said to be of another O“ riginal, and that therefore they were accounta“ ble to the People. “ These Principles and Pra“ ctices we of the Church of England profess to “ detest and abhor. “ The Power of the People,

 “ and the Deposing Power of the Pope, are two “ fundamental Principles of Rebellion. “ The “ Commonwealth’s-men, when they are asked, “ how the People, having once parted with their “ Power, come to resume it ? presently run to an “ implicit CONTRACT betwixt the Prince and the “ People, by virtue whereof the People have a “ fundamental Power left in themselves, which “ they are not to exercise, but upon Princes Vio“ lation of the Trust committed to them. “ Who “ made Conditional Settlements of Civil Power
 “ upon Princes ? Who keeps the ancient Deeds
 “ and Records of them ? For in all the first Ages
 “ of the Christian Church, this Conditional Pow“ er and Obedience was never heard of.

Here

Here we see the Foundation upon which this Government stands, and under which this Author has accepted Preferment; and all the Proceedings of the Lords and Commons, and of the People, towards the effecting the late Revolution, are branded as Republican Principles, destructive to the Government; such as none who own, can give sufficient Security for their Allegiance; such as the Church of England professeth to detest and abhor; a CONTRACT betwixt Prince and People, turn'd into Ridicule, and what not?

Now this Gentleman took another Course in his Politicks, than Mr. Johnson has done: A few Years after he wrote this Preface, he might perhaps enquire a little into our Antient Laws and Government; which it is to be presumed he was in a great measure in the dark concerning, when he let fly thus at random against Republican Principles of his own Christning. If he had consulted the Examples of our Forefathers, and the Provisions made by them from time to time, even with the Concurrence and Assent, and by the Authority of our Princes themselves, for the securing the Laws and Liberties of the People, and for a due and impartial Administration of Justice, according to settled and established Laws; he would hardly have have traduced Positions, as new upstart Commonwealth-Principles, which have so deep a Root in the Legal Government of this Nation; and which whoever shall deny, does, as far as in him lies, set this present Government upon a rotten, sandy Foundation. He would then perhaps have learn'd to practise what he tells us the best Teachers of Christianity did, viz. " They never meddled with " Crowns and Scepters, but left Mankind under

 " those Forms and Rules of Civil Government,
 " in which they found them. What greater and better Argument can be given against Church-mens introducing Religion or Christianity into the Forms and Rules of Civil Government, than what this Gentleman acknowledges, viz. that our Saviour and his Apostles meddled not with it : They left the several Civil Governments to depend upon their own Laws, Policies, and Constitutions; and there, and no where else, are we to seek for a Rule and Guide to our Consciences in Matters relating to Allegiance and Protection, the Power of the Prince, and the Duty of Subjects.

I am not here professedly taking upon me to maintain either of Mr. Johnson's Positions, which no Man is better able to make good than himself; though there is no great need of his undertaking it neither,

neither, unless some or other should have the Impudence to contradict him.

But I must beg leave to observe that heretofore under the Reigns of Princes, whose Accession to the Throne was occasion'd by the Removal of their Predecessors; the Doctrine contain'd in Mr. Johnson's second Position, was never look'd upon as dangerous to Princes, but countenanced and openly avowed.

In the first Year of King Edward the Third, there are these observable Words in a Statute of that King, viz. "Whereas it was necessary for our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and the Queen his Mother, seeing the Destructions, Damage, Oppressions and Dishonours, which were notoriously done in the Realm of England, upon Holy Church, Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other Great Men, and the Comminality, by the said Hugh and Hugh, Robert and Edmund Arundel, by the incroaching of such Royal Power to them, to take as good Counsel therein as they might. And seeing they might not remedy the same, unless they came into England with an Army of Men of War; and by the Grace of God, and with such Puissance, and with the Help of Great Men and Commons of the Realm, they have vanquished and destroyed

" the

“ the said Hugh and Hugh, Robert and Edmund.
 “ Wherefore our Sovereign Lord the King that “ now is, at his Parliament holden at Westmin- “ ster, &c. hath provided, ordained and esta“ blished, That no Great Man nor other, of what “ Estate, Dignity or Condition he be, that came “ with the said King that now is, & with the Queen
 “ his Mother into the Realm of England; nor none “ other then dwelling in England, that came with “ the said King that now is, and the Queen in “ Aid of them, to pursue their said Enemies, IN “ WHICH PURSUIT THE KING HIS FATHER WAS “ TAKEN AND PUT IN WARD, AND YET REMAIN-
 “ ETH IN WARD, shall not be impeached, mole“ sted nor grieved in Person, nor in Goods, in the “ King’s Court, nor other Court, FOR THE PUR-“ SUIT OF THE SAID KING, TAKING AND WITH-“ HOLDING OF HIS BODY, nor Pursuit of any “ other, nor taking of their Persons, Goods, &c.

This same Parliament reversed the Attainders of several Persons who had assisted Thomas Duke of Lancaster, towards the Removal of the Spencers, Father and Son, from the Presence and Councils of King Edward the Second, and particularly the Attainder of Thomas Duke of Lancaster himself, who,
 as Lord High Steward of England, had betaken himself self to Arms, to drive the Spencers out of the Realm, or to bring them to Justice, and had given the King Battel. And they not only reverse his Attainder, but in a Letter to the Pope, give an Account of his Worth, of the Justice of his Cause, that he died a Martyr, that Almighty God had been pleased to give a Testimony of his Innocence, &c. by permitting several Miracles to be wrought at his Tomb, which they desire the Pope to issue a Commission, to enquire whether they were real or not, and to canonize him for a Saint. The Reversal of his Attainder, and this Letter, are yet extant upon Record.

Nor could I ever meet in any of our Histories or Monuments, that give any Account of that Revolution, that King Edward the Third claimed the Crown, either by Conquest, though he came from beyond Sea with a Force too, and routed and dispersed those evil Counsellors who had got the King into their Interest; or by Right of Inheritance, though he was indeed the next Heir; but could have no Title by Descent, as long as his Father was alive; or that any other Hypothesis was invented to colour his Accession to the Crown, than what was really true in Fact, which was no other than his being set up by the States of the Realm, who had deposed his Father for his Misgovernment, upon formal Articles of Impeachment, which are yet to be seen in Adam Orleton's Apology, at the end of Henry Knighton's Chronicle: Much less would that King have endured such as should charge him to his Face with Usurpation, and that he was a King de facto only; but not de jure.

We know how his Successor, King Henry the 4th, treated a couple of Prelates that opposed his Title, which was the same with that of his Grandfather, the Victorious King Edward the Third. The Bishop of Carlisle was proceeded against in Parliament, and sentenced to Death, though the King was pleased to remit that. But for the Archbishop of York, the more virulent and bitter Adversary of the two, he made no more ado, but chopp'd his Head off.

Queen Elizabeth's Title to the Crown was by virtue of a Remainder settled upon her by Act of Parliament; other she had none, nor ever pretended to any, for she stood Illegitimated by an Ecclesiastical Sentence confirmed by Act of Parliament: And so sure a Title she took this to be, and was so little ashamed to own it, that it was made High-Treason, during her Reign, to deny that the Succession cession of the Crown might be altered by Act of Parliament, and a Præmunire forever.

I mention these things, because we hear, to our Astonishment, that Mr. Johnson's Book is not well receiv'd at Court; where, of all other places, in our poor Opinions, it ought to meet with the kindest Entertainment; because it justifies his Majesty's Proceedings, which were previous to the Revolution; and represents him, as the Truth is, to be a King, who has a Just and a Legal Right to the Crown by the Laws of this Realm.

By what Logick it can be made ill Doctrine, to assert the Lawfulness of removing bad Princes under the Government of good Ones, and those such, as upon a supposition of the Unlawfulness of removing bad Ones, can have no good Title to the Crown themselves, is what we cannot easily comprehend. But I have ever thought that Courtiers see farther into a Mill-stone than other Men, and that their way of Reasoning differs from that of the rest of Mankind, since I saw King Charles the Second heal: I took notice, that when the King put the Gold about their Necks that came to be Touch'd; the Bishop repeated over and over these Words out of St. John's Gospel, viz. This is the true Light, which enlightneth every Man that cometh into the World. I asked a Courtier, what relation the meaning of those Words could have to such an Occasion? And he told me, that I interpreted Scripture like a Peasant, and did not understand the Court-Interpretation of Scripture.

But this Court, we think, would do well to consult their Master's Honour and Safety more, than to sacrifice both to the Interest, or indeed but the supposed Interest of a Party of Men, who in their Principles are his avowed Enemies, and consequently are obliged to be so in their Practice, if an Opportunity ever present it self; and who of all Mankind are seldomest in the right.

By discountenancing Mr. Johnson's Discourse, they wound their Master's Honour in a double Respect; both his own personal Honour, and that of his Family.

His personal Honour, by contradicting him in his Declarations, and blemishing the Concurrence of others with him, to promote the Ends of his Expedition.

The Honour of his Family, by casting Dirt upon a Principle, which raised it to so great an Eminency in the Low-Countries, as that both his Majesty's Majesty's Father and himself married into a Royal Family ; by which his Majesty had an Opportunity, and has happily laid hold of it, to rescue a Distressed Nation from Tyranny and Oppression, and thereby to make so Illustrious a Figure as he does at present in this part of the World.

His Majesty accepted kindly that Learned and Ingenious Gentleman's Compliment to him, upon the singular and transcendent Honour, hereditary to his Family, of being the Champions of Almighty God, sent forth in several Ages to vindicate his own Cause from the greatest Oppressions. Which he and they have no otherwise done, than by espousing the Cause of Laws in opposition to the Exorbitancy of Princes, who obstinately declined to make them the Rule of their Government.

How far they endanger their Master's Safety, I pray God, neither his Majesty nor we may learn by woful Experience.

In short, either let them give his Majesty (say we) a legal Title to the Crown, which he cannot have but by the Laws of the Realm, which are the Foundation upon which every Government is built, that is not a Tyranny; or let them speak out roundly, ly, and say in plain Terms, that he is an Usurper;

Plain Dealing's a Jewel.

One Consideration more I will add before I leave this Head; and that is, that Trajan the Emperour, one of the greatest beyond dispute, and perhaps one of the worthiest and most excellent Princes that ever sway'd a Scepter, was so little concern'd whether his Subjects thought themselves obliged to yield Obedience to Tyrants or not, that one of his chief Favourites, and who knew his Mind very well, scrupled not to vent these bold and generous Truths in a Panegyrick made in his own Audience; viz.

Tuam Statuam in Vestibulo Jovis Optimi Maximi, unam alteramve & hanc aream, cernimus. At paulò ante aditus omnes, omnes gradus, totaque area hinc auro, hinc argento relucebat, seu potius polluebatur; quum incesti Principis statuis permixta Deorum simulachra sorderent. Ergo istæ quidem aereæ & paucæ manent, manebuntq; quamdiu Templum ipsum; illæ autem aureæ & innumera-biles strage & ruina publico gaudio litaverunt. Juva-bat illidere solo superbissimos vultus, instare ferro, se-vire securibus; ac si singulos ictus sanguis dolorque seque-retur, (here the Author in the hearing of an excel-lent Prince, describes the Multitude tearing a Ty-rant rant to pieces in Imagination, and does it with Joy and Triumph :) nemo tam temperans gaudij, feræque Lætitiæ, quàm instar ultionis videretur, cernere laceros artus, truncata membra; postremo truces, horrendasque imagines abjectas, excoctasque flammis, ut ex illo terrore & nimis in usum hominum & voluptates mutarentur.

And a little after, Quàm de malo Principe posteri tacent, manifestum est eadem facere præsentem.

Then he puts Trajan into the same Class with Brutus, who was instrumental in delivering Rome from the Tyranny of the Tarquins, and him that help'd to kill Julius Cesar in the Senate: Visuntur eadem ex materiâ Cæsaris Statuæ, qua Brutorum, qua Camillorum. Nec discrepat causa. Illi enim Reges Hostemque Victorem mœnibus depulerunt: hic Regnum ipsum, quæque alia captivitas gignit, arcet ac submovet; sedemque obtinet Principis ne sit Domino locus.

And whereas the Author of the Preface to the three Treatises, makes a Jest of Conditional Settlements of Power, Pliny tells us, that the publick Prayers for this Emperour were conceiv'd conditionally, viz: Si bene Rempublicam & ex utilitate omnium rexerit.

He applauds him for countenancing and restoring the Posterity of such as had signaliz'd themselves in asserting the Laws and Liberties of their Country. An aliud a te quam senatus reverentia obtinuit, ut juvenibus clarissimæ gentis, debitum generi honorem, sed antequam deberetur, offerres? Tandem ergo Nobilitas non obscuratur, sed illustratur a Principe; tandem illos ingentium Virorum nepotes, illos posteros Libertatis, nec terret Cæsar, nec pavet; quinimò festinatis honoribus amplificat atque auget, & majoribus suis reddit.

He tells him that no Prince can be acceptable to God, who has not the Love of the People, and that therefore Trajan had concluded his Vota publicæ muncupata, ut ita precibus suis Dii annuerent, si Judicium Populi mereri perseverasset. Adèd (says Pliny) nihil tibi amore civium antiquius, ut ante a nobis, deinde a Diis, atque ita ab illis amari velis, si a nobis ameris. Et sanè priorum Principum exitus docuit, ne a Diis quidem amari, nisi quos homines ament.

And at the end of his Panegyrick the Author prays to Jupiter Capitolinus to preserve the Emperour to them and their Posterity, upon the same Condition; Si bene Rempublicam, si ex utilitate omnium revereat.

And

And all these Principles were good Doctrine under the Reign of a good Prince ; one, who when he delivered the Sword to the Commander in chief of the Pretorian Cohorts, gave it him with this Charge ; viz. to use for him, if he deserv'd it ; if not, to use it against him.

As Mr. Johnson tells us truly, that Passive Obedience is calculated for Tyranny ; so are the opposite Principles calculated for Liberty under a Free Government. Nor can any Prince be afraid of them, who is not conscious to himself that his Government is such, as deserves to have the Effects of them brought home to his door : and therefore whoever assert them under the Reign of a Just Prince, put the greatest Affront upon him imaginable, for consequentially they call him a Tyrant to his face.

I have argued with some of our Jure-Divino-Men upon this Topick, viz. That Passive Obedience is directly against the Law of the Nation, by which all Persons whatsoever, who act by virtue of any Authority derived from the Prince, must act at their Peril ; for that if such Authority, Writ, Commission, or whatever it is, be not warranted by Law, the Persons who put it in execution, are Trespassers ; and if they meet with Opposition, and kill the Opponents, are Murderers, because they acted without any Authority at all : for an illegal Commission is a void Commission, and a void Commission is no Commission. Whereas, according to our Passive-Obedience-Gentlemen, a void Commission, which our Law says ought not to be obey'd, does yet command our Obedience, equally with a Commission warranted by Law, because it proceeds, forsooth, from the Authority of the Sovereign.

They have not been able to deny, being thus pressed, that Passive-Obedience has no Foundation in the ancient Laws of this Realm; and have betaken themselves to a few Clauses in an Act or two of Parliament made since the Restauration of King Charles the Second : The one is the Corporation-Oath, whereby is renounced “ the Traiterous Position “ of taking up Arms by the King’s Authority a“ gainst his Person, OR AGAINST THOSE THAT ARE “ COMMISSIONED BY HIM.

Besides that this Oath is now taken away by an Act of Parliament in the first Year of their present Majesties Reign, they would do well to remember what passed in the House of Lords in the Year 1675, when great Endeavours were used to have this Oath imposed as a Test upon the whole Nation ;

on; what was then alledged against it; and that the Bill was thereupon thrown out of the House. But the chief thing that I now think fit to mention, is, that in the very sense of the Parliament which passed it, Persons Legally Commissioned were understood, and no others: for it met with main Opposition in the House of Commons; and in particular Sir Edward Vaughan, who was afterwards Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common-Pleas, made a long Speech, in which he shewed that by the Law the People of England not only might, but in some Cases were bound to take up Arms against Persons Commissioned by the King; and that Sheriffs of Counties were bound, if it could be done no otherwise, to raise the Posse Comitatus to oppose and suppress all such as should put any such illegal Commissions in Execution, if they proceeded so far as to compel Obedience to them; for then they became Rioters, and subject to the several Acts of Parliament made for the suppressing of such Offenders. To which Sir Heneage Finch, then Solicitor General, and afterwards Earl of Nottingham, and Lord Chancellor of England, who was a great promoter of the Bill, made no other Answer but this, viz. That the word Legally needed not be inserted, for that it must of necessity be understood to be implied, because Persons not Legally Commissioned, were not Commissioned at all. Upon which the Bill passed. And for the truth of this I appeal to the Memories of some who are yet alive, and were Members of that Parliament, and present in the House at this Debate.

The same Oath, with very little Alteration in Words, is in the Act for ordering the Forces in the several Counties of this Kingdom, commonly called the Militia-Act: The Alteration is this, OR AGAINST THOSE THAT ARE COMMISSIONED BY HIM, IN PURSUANCE OF SUCH MILITARY COMMISSIONS. Those Military Commissions are Commissions of the Lieutenancy, which we know to be settled and regulated by a Law; and therefore to swear not to oppose them; is no more than to swear not to fight against an Act of Parliament.

The rest are cursory Expressions in the Preambles of an Act or two, which we know do not make a Law.

But I fear the Fountain of the Errors that our Clergy have run into upon this Subject, is their framing to themselves an Idol of their own Invention, instead of a Legal English King. This Cheat was discovered early in the 7th Year of the Reign of K. James the First; and complain'd of in an Apology of the House of Commons in those Days; viz. That instead of enquiring into what Power, Authority and Prerogatives the Kings of England enjoy by the Laws of this Nation, our Men of speculative Heads had framed to themselves a general Notion of the word King, as a Genus; had given it a Definition, and brought all Kings, and other single supreme Magistrates as Individuals, under that Definition.

By which Means the Laws and Constitutions of Nations were silenc'd; and whatever Government had a single Person at the Head of it, was equally subject to that single Person, however their several Laws and Constitutions respectively might limit and restrain his Power.

This pernicious as well as senseless Hypothesis strikes at the Root of whatever the Church is possessed of in Temporals, as well as at the Liberty and Property of Lay-Subjects: for the Clergy have no Privileges, Jurisdictions, Endowments, &c. but what are conferred upon them, and secured to them by Law; which Law if they subject to the Personal Power of the Prince, their Injoyment of them is precarious, and they have nothing but his good Nature to depend upon.

Not to mention the Ingratitude they show, in having received so ample Benefactions from the Charity of our Ancestors, who should be the Proprietors of their Estates, out of which they are vided so liberally for them, and yet endeavouring to inflave their Masters, and render their Liberty and Property precarious.

But St. Paul's Words to Timothy are verified in these Men, viz. Desiring to be Teachers of the Law, they understand neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm.

We could wish that Mr. Johnson had enlarged his Book with what he does but hint at, and barely mention, I mean the Doctrine of the Mirroure, the Confessor's Laws, the Curtana Sword, and the Power of the Lord High Steward, and other great Officers of the Kingdom: but particularly that he had given us an Account of the Authority of the Lord High Steward, concerning which Great Officer we find but some few Scraps here and there in any printed Book; but they are such as give us good Cause to believe that he was farther intrusted and impowred to redress Misgovernment in the State, than our Clergy are generally aware of; and tho' there be no such standing Officer at this Day, yet there having been such an one, it would do well if we were informed both wherein his Office did particularly consist, and how it came to be disused.

The Stile of Mr. Johnson's Preface offends some amongst us, as too light and wanton for the Gravity vity of the Subject; others, as making too bold with his Superiours by personal Reflections. To the former, we who are his Friends, give this Answer, That it is a very hard Matter for an Author to keep his Gravity, when he thinks he has nothing but Nonsense to encounter with. To the second, That his Sufferings having been so considerable, and perhaps his Disappointment so too, he may the better be allowed a Freedom of his Pen, in treating those, whom perhaps he may look upon either personally, or in their Principles, to have been instrumental in either.

Where we find so much Truth, so much Integrity, and such Strength of Reason, as appears in every Page of his Discourse, we can easily dispense with humane Infirmities, if more had really intervened, than what we hear are objected against him.
